outer sheath around the coating. One of the most common forms of the coating is a polymer coating prepared by polymerization of a polymerizable resin composition in a liquid, such as an organic solvent. As another example of the coating, there is a coating of an ultraviolet (UV)-curable resin prepared by the methods of radical polymerization, cationic polymerization, or graft polymerization to introduce a functional group into the coating and curing the coating with UV light. The optical fiber is made by preparing a raw optical fiber preform having the coated layer and then drawing the coated optical fiber preform from the preform to prepare a fiber. To obtain an optical fiber having a predetermined desired property, an optical fiber preform is typically prepared by applying a coating over a core or a cladding in the preform and then drawing the coated optical fiber preform to prepare a drawn optical fiber. For the conventional coating applied to the optical fiber, usually, a resin composition is prepared by adding several components to form the coating and using this composition to apply the coating to the optical fiber. The coating is usually applied in a wet method, a dry method, or a semi-dry method to coating the coating. A
